

Trade Cards

Trade cards became popular in the late 1800's as a form of advertising. The Willimantic Linen Company, which later became the American Thread Company, used them to promote their products. Various images would appear on these cards such as famous places, popular characters, children and animals.

Create your own trade card for the Mill Museum.

Sample trade card created by a Windham Middle School student.

